Appendix B: U.S. Census Geographies

Figures 1.3. and 1.5. present the Census blocks and Census block groups used throughout this report. Blocks and block groups were carefully selected to most closely cover the entire SAMP Project Area, but the reader will recognize that both study areas include some areas that are not part of the SAMP Project Area and exclude some areas that are part of the SAMP Project Area.

Ninety-one Census blocks were selected to represent the SAMP Project Area (see Figure 1.3.). Because blocks are the smallest geographic units available for descriptions of Census data, block-level data is the most desirable for inclusion in the report. However, because the population within a block may be small enough that it is possible to identify individuals within the block, the Census Bureau withholds much block-level data, to protect the confidentiality of residents. The Census Bureau manages this disclosure issue by releasing only a limited number of demographic variables. These variables, presented in Chapter 2, include population, race, gender, age, household characteristics, and housing occupancy and ownership.

Other demographic Census variables, such as education, income, and employment status, while not released at the block level due to the confidentiality issue mentioned above, remain important to creating a comprehensive socioeconomic profile. Therefore, key demographic variables, including those also available at the block level, are presented in Chapters 3, 4, and 5 of this report for four block groups selected to represent the SAMP Project Area (Figure 1.5.). To clarify, this report presents block group-level data for variables that are also presented at the block level in Chapter 2. This repetition is done to provide a reference for understanding and comparing all variables presented at the block group level. Because the block- and block group-level study areas are different, the same variables presented in Chapter 2 and Chapters 3, 4, and 5 will not be readily comparable.
